Each hunt listed is taken up in turn, and, in addition to the interesting features of its history, descriptions of the hounds, the country, the list of masters, their policies and summaries of present conditions are furnished.

In what the authors say about Deep Rin Hunt the fact is brought out that around Richmond, as olsewhere in Lirginia, nearly every country gentleman formerly maintained hounds and hunted with a pack like that made up of the ancestors of Castle Hill hounds, owned to-day by Mrs. Allen Potts, the only woman who is a recognized master of hounds in America. The founder of the Castle Hill pack was Dr. Thomas authors turn their attention to "old man Haskins," the ancestor of the famous Chevy Chase Hunt; to the Montreal Hunt, founded in 1826, and standing at the head of all the hunts in America to-day; to the Charlottes-ville Hunt, founded in 1894; to the Meadow Brook Hunt and the possibilities of fox-hunting on Long Island; to the Middlesex Hunt, founded in 1897, and to many other hunts North and South, among them the Portland Chub, 3,000 miles away to the Northwest, where the stiffest jumps are fallen trees, and the collaborators, in thinking of them remilinscently, utter the following fervent admonition:

"O ye thrusters of the Eastern hunting countries, remember the unbreakable character of these obstacles in the Fortland Hunt country, and respectfully salute the Western sportsmen who ride at them!"

Nearly 100 full-page illustrations add to the value of Mr. Higginson's book, which is printed on large, heavy pages. The pictures are portraits of masters, hunting scenes and historical views. Many interesting details are distributed through the book, none of which are more so than the extracts from the "Bible" of the "Dean of American Fox-Hunting," Major William Austin Wadsworth, master for thirty-two years of the hounds of the Genessee Valley Hunt, Genesco, N. Y. to whom the volume is dedicated as one who "has set & high standard for the risking generation," The secret of his success is said to be due to his has existed as a favorite pastime from the date of the first settlement of these States, gentlemen maintaining their individual packs and hunting over the country at will; but the formation of regular organizations, they point out its almost entirely a thing of the past thirty years.

As early as 1766 an organized hunt, under the name of the Gloucester Fox. Hunting Club, says Mr. Higginson, was established with a limited membership of twenty-five, the organizers being residents of Philadelphia and of the county of Gloucester, across the Delaware River, in New Jersey. All of its hunting was interrupted by the American Rovolution, but at the close of the War the original club president.

The authors' mention various other Pennsylvania hunts that have descended from the Gloucester Club, as the Lima and the Radoor Hunt, of which Mr. Charles E. Mather, one of the strongest supporters of the English fox-bound in America, has been master son and Chamberlain are set down in order thus:
